Age discrimination case

I have mentioned the first anti-age discrimination case that the Commission was able to establish that the world had changed and personal choice in the matter of retirement is the way to go. Subsequent to that, around the same time, I know that my predecessors in the Senate of Canada, under David Croll, did a study on aging and retirement. Retirement Without Tears was the title of the report that they did. And Frank Wilson was doing a study for the province on the same topic, so New Brunswick played a significant role through the Charles Little case on personal-choice retirement.
